

THE TEST OF MY MORAL AUTHORITY

Between Journalistic Ethics and Ideological Interests

There are three arms in the democratic governing process, maybe four if we add the media.

There is no shame in this game. Every media entity has its political, social, and communal interests that shape the content they produce, and the narratives they promote.

We are everything the mainstream media is not. As community media, we offer a significant alternative to the corporate media's profit-oriented scheme.

We do not work for Wall Street. We work for the community.

We are driven by social objectives rather than the private profit motive; we empower people rather than treat them as money-spinning tools and nurture local knowledge rather than replace it with standard solutions.
